

This being the weekend, I am going to make a political post here. If you have no interest, read no further please.

Watching the latest media blitz and controversy surrounding Michael Moore's new movie, nearly as much PR as Mel Gibson got for his film, some things come to mind.

The right wingers are very afraid to have their followers see this movie, which makes me wonder why?

I listened to a local talk show radio host who saw the film, and his comments were:

"This movie is a piece of crap, and Michael Moore is a fat slob."

Perhaps the movie is a piece of crap, don't know, haven't seen it. But fat slobbs have made good movies before, so Moore's girth is certainly no factor in an objective movie review.

Peter Jackson, winner of the academy award for the Lord of the Rings last installment is a fat slob.

Alfred Hitchcock was known to be a fat slob too.

Anyway, there are many who would censor Moore's film, or encourage their followers not to see it.

Why? It is just Moore's opinion, and the fact is that the more controversy there is over this film, the more people will want to see it.

I recently watched the interview of Moore on Conan Obrien on Tivo, which give me the luxury of pausing, rewinding, etc. on the fly.

Here is what separates Moore from the right wingers in my opinion, especially the likes of Rush Limbaugh, Hannity, Anne Coulter, etc.

These right wing preachers speak as if only they are possessed of the truth. They nearly always speak in absolute certain terms, not claiming to be expressing an opinion. They speak as if their point of view is fact. Clearly, their point of view is not fact; at least any thinking person knows that.

Anyway, I watched the interview with Moore, and here is a portion of what he said:

"...Look, I am just out there saying what I believe in...and and...doing my work...and presenting my opinion..and it really is my opinion, I could be right or wrong...uh, I think I am right, it is my opinion, but the other guy could be right too..so I think what's great about this country is that everybody gets to express their opinion, and let's have the great debate and hopefully we will end up with what's best for the country."

Here Here!!!

We need more pundits and talking heads saying just exactly what he said.

Go see this film if you want. Personally, I will not see it, as I have no interest, but for those that do have an interest, don't let the likes of the propaganda masters of Fox News et. al. keep you from making up your own mind.
