Never married.

From obituary:

"Miss Bessie Louisa Seger, 87 years old, first white girl to live in Washita County, died Friday, April 14, at her home in Colony. She was the daughter of John H. Seger, Indian agent, who conducted an Indian colonization project on Cobb Creek in Washita County. She had lived at Colony for eighty-one years except for four years near El Reno. . . ."

When she was nine months old, she moved with her parents to Hammon, where they stayed one year, returning to Darlington and living there until 1884.

The family first lived in the area which later became Seger's Colony in 1884 and 1885 when the government devised a plan for leasing all the Cheyenne-Arapaho territory west of the South Canadian River to cattle companies and Seger was sent out as overseer. Miss Seger and her two brothers were the only white children in the area.

The lease was cancelled in 1885, and the Segers returned to Darlington. Shortly afterward, he was selected by Jesse M. Lee, military agent, to conduct a colonization project with 500 Indians from the Darlington reservation, the last of their tribe to abandon the warpath, and he returned with them to the site of his former home in what was to become Washita County.

Soon afterward, he moved his family from Caldwell, Kansas, to Colony. From 1889 to 1893 Miss Seger lived near the old town of Reno City, north of El Reno, where her father had filed on a homestead.

In 1893 she returned with the family to Colony where her father became superintendent of the Seger Indian School. In 1901 she ran for a claim, which she proved in 1905.

She operated a hotel in Colony, served as boys' matron at the Seger Indian School, taught music to settlers' children in the early days, and worked several years as a telephone operator in Colony and Weatherford.

She was a member of the Columbian Memorial Presbyterian Church.

She died at 5:10 o'clock last Friday afternoon at the residence in Colony where she had lived for forty-three years. . . ."

Notes for Andrew William Seger, Jr.:

Article below appears to place Andrew in Indian Territory in 1881:

[INDIANS: CAVE AT WASHITA RANCH...CHEYENNE TRANSPORTER.]

Arkansas City Traveler, March 30, 1881. Front Page.

Near the Washita ranch, about seventy-five miles west of here, is a funnel shaped cave, which is about fourteen feet deep and twelve feet in diameter at its base. Its opening is circular and about three feet across. It is formed in solid rock, and is occupied principally by rattlesnakes.

Mr. Andrew Seger, while hunting in that locality last fall, found the opening, and discovered at the bottom of the cave a human skeleton, but the vigilance of the snakes made further investigation unsafe. A short time ago, when he thought the reptiles were dormant from cold, he went into the cave to make further examination. The bones were evidently those of an Indian, there being with them two blankets; one of them being handsomely beaded, and on the wrists bracelets, such as are worn by Indians. No arms or ammunition could be found, which, with the position of the bones, leads Mr. Seger to conclude that the man was murdered, and the body thrown in there for concealment. The grass grows to the edge of the opening, and there is nothing to warn man or animal of the existence of the cave, so we think it not improbable that this man fell into it, and was killed by the fall.

See note on son (Elmer Andrew). Placement based on father's subsequent location to Osceola, Nebraska.
